DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

1. The following is a quotation of the first paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall contain a written description of the invention, and of the manner and process of making and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same and shall set forth the best mode contemplated by the inventor of carrying out his invention.

Claim 1 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph, as containing subject matter which was not described in the specification in such a way as to enable one skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and/or use the invention. The claim describes a system that operates perpetually without any source of power. It is not clear how the proposed system manages the inherent internal operating losses to function indefinitely.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 101

2. 35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

Claim 1 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the disclosed invention is inoperative and therefore lacks utility.

The proposed perpetual motion cycle does not take into consideration that the energy inputted to the electric motor is transformed into at least mechanical and heat energy. The mechanical energy is outputted through the motor shaft and the heat energy is transmitted through at least the friction existing between moving pads like the bearings and the gears. As soon as the initial inputted source of energy is disconnected from the electric motor, the energy received from the generator will be transformed into at least mechanical and heat energy in the electric motor and gears. Therefore, the mechanical energy provided by the electric motor to the generator will continuously be less than the energy the generator is providing to the electric motor, until the system comes to a stop.

Response to Arguments

3. Applicant's arguments filed on August 20, 2003 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive. In response to applicant's argument to the 101 and 112 rejections, it is the examiner's position that a perpetual motion machine violates the laws of conservation of energy. During the operation of the system, energy will be lost due to friction heat, therefore it will be unable to operate perpetually.

4. The applicant is required to supply a working model of the invention to establish the operability of the device. (See 37 CFR 1.93).

5. No prior art has been applied to the claims at this time. Prior Art will be applied to the claims when a working model and an enabling disclosure have been provided.
